Foote's Hill African American Survey District

Cockeysville

Baltimore County, MD

1870s-1930s

The Foote's Hill African American Survey District has taken its name from an African American family predominant in the area since the second half of the 19th century. African American community at Foote's Hill can be found as early as 1877. The site of the Basil A.M.E. Church was occupied by an African-American school house. It is possible that the current Basil Church was built in the 1870s to serve as a school as well as a church. By 1915, several more buildings had been added to the area, with most located near the intersection of Foote's Hill and Sherwood Road.
